On March 1, 2013, Greg Nitch took over as Vice President “Customer” at Recaro Aircraft Seating. As a member of the executive management team, Nitch is responsible for sales, program management and customer service. With the new appointment the aircraft seat manufacturer completed its executive management team and prepares for the further expansion of its international activities.

“We are delighted to welcome Greg Nitch as the new Vice President ‘Customer’, he is the ideal person for this position,” says Andreas Lindemann, Chief Sales Officer of Recaro Aircraft Seating. “He has many years of experience in sales and international management from his previous functions in the United States, Europe and Asia.”

Before joining Recaro Aircraft Seating, Greg Nitch worked in sales at Lurgi, a specialized supplier for the construction of large-scale plants. At the beginning of his career, he worked as a project manager at ABB in the United States, which is his native country, and served in management positions in project management and sales at Siemens. “I am looking forward to working with my team at Recaro Aircraft Seating to strengthen existing as well as new customer relationships,” says Nitch.

In 2012, Recaro Aircraft Seating enhanced the company’s management structures: “In order to continue on our path for growth and strengthen our international presence, we decided to expand our management team to include an additional level,” says Dr. Mark Hiller, Chief Executive Officer of Recaro Aircraft Seating.

In addition to Dr. Mark Hiller and Andreas Lindemann, this team also includes the heads of the four newly created units "Customer", "Research and Development", "Supply Chain" as well as "Finance and Administration". The positions of the latter three units were filled with long-time employees of Recaro Aircraft Seating in April 2012.
