Recaro's BL3710 Economy Class seat

Recaro Aircraft Seating is equipping Aeroflot's Airbus fleet with more than 50 shipsets of the BL3710 and CL4710.

The first of Aeroflot's new A320/A321 fleet took flight for the first time on May 25. Delivery of the aircraft, includes a total of more than 10,000 Recaro seats, will continue through 2028. The Economy Class seats feature leather dress covers and the business class seats are covered in fabric and leather.

"Both Aeroflot and Recaro want to offer passengers a comfortable seat when traveling, which is why we are always excited to collaborate with the airline," said Dr. Mark Hiller, CEO and Shareholder at Recaro Aircraft Seating in yesterday's announcement. "From state-of-the-art technology to seat ergonomics, Recaro seats will elevate the passenger journey and optimize airline operations."

The CL4710 for medium- and short-haul Business Class

The CL4710 Business Class seat was designed for medium and short-haul flights. With a 21-inch seat width and oversized tray table, the Business Class seat provides ample room for working passengers.<sup>2</sup>

There is also seatback in-flight entertainment systems and power ports, ergonomic backrest with a five-inch recline, and adjustable calf-rest.

The BL3710 Economy Class seat flying on Aeroflot features enhanced neck support, innovative tray table design and weighs less than 10 kilograms. The modular design of the economy class seat allows for maximum freedom in layout configuration and keeps operation costs low.

In 2019, Aeroflot transported more than 37 million passengers to 340 destinations in 57 countries.
