

Semmco and Newbow Aerospace announce integration at MRO Europe

Semmco Group and Newbow Aerospace have announced an integration under the Semmco brand name at MRO Europe in Amsterdam, The Netherlands

The HAKI Safety Group has announced that Semmco Group and Newbow Aerospace will be integrated under the Semmco brand name. The transition will happen immediately and was announced at MRO Europe in Amsterdam today.

Semmco Group, which manufactures specialist aviation access equipment for aircraft and helicopters as well as supplying a range of Ground Support Equipment (GSE), was acquired by HAKI Safety in October 2024 while Newbow Aerospace, which manufactures and supplies GSE, was acquired in February.

Commenting on the integration of the two businesses under one brand Sverker Lindberg, President and CEO of HAKI Safety, said, "The aviation market segment is an attractive one that we intend to grow in. Both the businesses' products are designed to enable engineers to safely and efficiently maintain aircraft during scheduled service or maintenance and therefore bringing them together and investing in a single brand and product and service portfolio makes sense for both us and our customers."

Following the announcement, Semmco will now have three manufacturing and engineering locations. The headquarters in Woking, the new GSE focused site in Redditch and the Arlington, Texas facility which boasts bespoke engineering capability.

Speaking at MRO Europe, Will McOnie, Managing Director of the newly expanded Semmco business, said, "Bringing us together gives our customers a much-expanded product portfolio and offers them the best of two terrific businesses under one roof. Our increased manufacturing footprint will reduce lead times and now engineers and procurement professionals alike can access what they need from a single point."
