

AJW Group appoints David Ropper as VP Business Development for North America

David Ropper, Vice President of Business Development for the North American region

AJW Group has announced the appointment of David Ropper as Vice President of Business Development for the North American region. Ropper brings a wealth of international experience to the role, successfully navigating OEMs and lessors, the February 6 press release said. This includes 13 years at BAE Systems and five years at Elix Aviation.

Ropper is a seasoned consultant within the aviation industry with expertise in leasing and relationship-building, “positioning him to foster customer connections while elevating the AJW brand,” the company said.

In his new role, Ropper will lead the company's strategic business growth throughout North America, showcasing the capabilities of its state-of-the-art MRO facility, AJW Technique, in Montreal, Canada.

"We are delighted to welcome David as the new Vice President of Business Development for North America," said Scott Symington, Chief Commercial Officer of AJW Group. "With his extensive background in leasing and sales within the aviation industry, we are confident that he will not only drive our business development goals but also cultivate and strengthen our customer relationships."

AJW Group said it looks forward to the "positive impact of [Ropper's] leadership on the North American market."