

SkyTender announces leadership change, new phase for company

SkyTender has announced a leadership change and a new phase for the company in a press release.

"After over a decade of dedicated service, Wolfgang von Krogh steps down as CEO for personal reasons," reads the release. "We extend our heartfelt thanks for his exceptional contributions — from building the company from the ground up to guiding it through the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic and market entry. His leadership has laid a strong foundation for the future."

Starting August 1, Jörn Sievers assumes the role of CEO, focusing on finance, strategy and HR. Dr. Thomas Mützel-von Schwartz takes on the role of COO, responsible for technology, operations, quality and sales.

Both Sievers and Mützel-von Schwartz have been instrumental in SkyTender's journey over the past 10 years, the press release highlights. Sievers as a trusted advisor, and Mützel-von Schwartz as a long-standing member of the executive board.

"Together, they have played a key role in successfully positioning our products in the market," it reads.

With the company now firmly established, the new leadership team will focus on preparing the organization for scalable growth — while ensuring continuity remains at the core of its strategy.

"We thank Wolfgang for his visionary leadership as well as his continuous support as shareholder and warmly welcome the new team as they guide SkyTender into its next chapter," the release concludes.