British Airways collaborates with Plane Talking Products on First tableware

British Airways unveils new tableware for First cabin in partnership with Plane Talking Products

British Airways is unveiling a new dining concept for its First cabin, including new tableware in collaboration with Plane Talking Products (PTP) as part of its revamped A380 experience.

The dining concept "brings together new service equipment, a refreshed culinary approach and specialist cabin crew training to create a more personal and flexible experience," said Warren O'Connor, Catering & Product Development, Senior Manager, at British Airways.

"PTP is proud to have worked in collaboration with British Airways to develop the new tableware collection for its First cabin," the supplier said via LinkedIn. "Featuring premium bone china, contemporary glassware and bespoke presentation pieces, the collection has been designed to enhance every dining moment and showcase the very best of British hospitality in the air."

New elements of the service also include separate food and drink menus, an amuse-bouche before dining and an Anytime Dining menu featuring a "From the Grill" concept.

"We are honored to support British Airways in delivering an elevated First experience where every detail matters," said PTP.
