At WTCE, Plane Talking Products will unveil a curated showcase celebrating the “art” of onboard design, spanning dining, well-being, comfort and circularity

At booth 4C70 at WTCE 2026, Plane Talking Products (PTP) will present a curated showcase built around what it calls the “art” of onboard design—spanning dining, well-being, comfort and circularity.

Leading the display is “The art of texture,” a tableware concept inspired by modern ceramics. With carved details, bespoke glazes and layered surfaces, the collection focuses on tactile refinement and understated luxury. Sustainability remains central to development.

“Understanding how any of these developments influence a product’s carbon footprint is essential. We help airlines assess this impact and identify changes that deliver the greatest environmental benefit,” says Lee Harper, Product Specialist at PTP.

In “The art of self-care,” PTP extends well-being beyond the cabin through sensory amenities designed to support rest and renewal.

“Technology offers an excellent opportunity to engage with passengers from the moment they book, 1 allowing the well-being experience to extend way beyond the product and service on board,” says Alison Wells, CEO at PTP.

Additional concepts—The art of layers, flow and repurpose—highlight modular systems, differentiated textiles and responsible material choices, underscoring PTP’s four decades of aviation expertise and its focus on longevity, flexibility and circular design, on display at booth 4C70.
