

Corendon introduces adult-only zone on flights to Curaçao

Passengers flying without children on flights to the island of Curaçao can enjoy an adults-only zone

Corendon Dutch Airlines, the sister airline of Turkish leisure airline Corendon Airlines is introducing a children-free zone on board its flights between Amsterdam and Curaçao. The Only Adult zone is intended for passengers travelling without children and for business passengers who want to work in a quiet environment, says the airline.

The airline also believes the zone will have a “positive effect on parents with children, as “they don't have to worry as much about possible reactions from fellow passengers if their child is a bit busier or cries.”

"On board our flights, we always strive to respond to the different needs of our customers. We are also the first Dutch airline to introduce the Only Adult zone because we cater trying to appeal to travellers looking for some extra peace of mind during their flight. We also believe this can have a positive effect on parents travelling with small children. They can enjoy the flight without worrying if their children make more noise," said Atılay Uslu, Founder of Corendon in an August 23 statement.

The Only Adult zone is located in the front section of the aircraft and consists of nine XL seats with extra legroom and 93 standard seats. The zone is physically separated from the rest of the aircraft by means of walls and curtains. A seat reservation in the Only Adult zone costs €45 (US$49) per single journey. And an XL seat in the Adult Only zone costs €100 ($108) each way. The Only Adult zone is accessible to passengers aged 16 and over.

The Corendon flights to Curaçao will start from November 3.
