

Malton Inflight relocates to London-Gatwick

The Beehive original building

Malton Inflight tells PAX International today that its UK office has relocated to The Beehive building at London-Gatwick Airport (LGW). The company says the announcement comes following a review of its global operations post-pandemic.

Built in 1936, The Beehive was the original passenger terminal building at Gatwick. The structure is credited with being the UK's first integrated airport building, with all airport necessities inside. Now it houses offices, with many original art-deco features and furnishings remaining to this day, reads the Malton Inflight press release.

"It certainly feels like our spiritual home already and we feel very fortunate and privileged to be here," reads the release.